Good advice

Dear Annie

At the end of my rope with husband's family

Dear Annie: My husband and I have been married for three years. Life together has been good since our relationship blossomed almost five years ago. But my in-laws have never supported our relationship because I'm not a member of the Latter-day Saints church, and because our relationship started while we were both separated but not divorced from our previous spouses.

When we get together for family events or vacations, my in-laws ignore me entirely (won't look or speak to me for days). If I am spoken to, anything I say is manipulated and turned into something it isn't. Nobody in my husband's family attended our wedding, and nobody reached out when I gave birth to our son over a year ago.

My husband is aware of their treatment, but he ignores them and pretends that everything is fine even though this has hurt me quite deeply. After my mother-in-law didn't show up for our son's birth, spread lies, said I wasn't welcome in her home and stopped communicating with us for almost a year, she wants to begin visiting to see her grandson. She visited a couple of weeks ago but didn't interact with our son, and when we explained how much she hurt us and how much we wished she was a part of our lives, she just blew us off without taking any ownership of her actions.

I don't want to be around these people.

ANNIE LANE

They are toxic, and I am much happier, and my marriage is much healthier, without them. My husband wants to spend time with his family. What should I do? — Impossible In-Laws

Dear Impossible In-Laws: Family is a gift, and I usually suggest that we do everything in our power to hold our families close and make amends in times of conflict.

Your case is different; you must set boundaries to protect your marriage, your happiness and your son, who deserves an abundance of love and not the ostracism of his father's family. Exposing him to such negativity will do only harm.

Do not allow such toxicity in your home. If your husband wishes to see his family, he can visit them solo.

Dear Annie: After reading the letter from "Desperate for my Son," from the parents whose son was ignoring them, I noticed something that you didn't mention. Toward the end of the letter, the father mentioned that he and his wife were Christians and "love the Lord."

He also said he didn't think his son was "following his earlier beliefs anymore," and that he was anxious to "get this fixed."

It's interesting that after all this time and separation, he is thinking about proselytizing to his son, rather than just meeting him wherever he is in life. Perhaps the son wanted to escape from this aspect of his father. The fact that he wants to "fix" his son's beliefs is a red flag for me, and possibly a clue to the estrangement. The father might be better off doing some self-reflection. — Skeptical in NY State

Dear Annie: Meeting our loved ones where they are, as you say, is often a crucial part of maintaining difficult relationships. Thank you for your wise perspective.

Dear Annie: I resembled the woman who wrote to say that she was staying married for the sake of her son. My then-husband quit his job shortly after the birth of our fourth son, and it took me seven years to realize that honor, marriage, family and commitment mean partnership — not martyrdom.

I worked full time, went back to grad school to enhance my earning power and did nearly all of the housework while he remained unemployed. As time wore on, the environment grew toxic, as I was constantly angry and worried.

One night, I came home in tears at 10:30 p.m. because I had gone to the grocery store after night classes and could not afford to buy basic groceries. Somehow, I suddenly realized I was not being a good role model for our sons. I asked myself what advice I would have for a stranger in the same situation. I found an attorney. I gave my husband 60 days to land a job — any job, even part-time — or I would file for divorce.

After 30 days, I reminded him of my ultimatum and said that I was still serious. At 60 days, I said I was going to the lawyer today. He asked for counseling. I said it was too late. I checked out as soon as the 60-day timer went off. Staying for the sake of the children is noble in thought, but not worth it for anyone involved. — Been There, Got Out and Lived Happily Ever After

Dear Been There: You were really being taken advantage of, and your resolve is admirable. Sounds like your husband pushed as far as he could, figuring you would cave, but you did not. If you really are living happily ever after, more power to you.

If, on the other hand, you want to allow your husband back into your life, his willingness to enter counseling could be a healthy first step toward reconciliation. The good news is that the decisions about your future are up to you, and not anyone else, because of your strength of character. Thanks for sharing your story.

Car Talk

Even the smallest add-on can add up to millions

Dear Car Talk: I love your column and wouldn't miss it. Here's my question: Why don't car manufacturers put two sun visors on cars — one for the windshield and one for the side window?

I live where there are lots of winding roads, and every time I go around a bend, the sun "shifts" and ends up right in my eyes.

Years ago, I had a Volvo with two visors, so when I was driving, I didn't have to keep flipping the visor back and forth from front to side as I drove. Thanks. — Fran

A handful of cars I've driven have had them, Fran. But off the top of my head, I can't remember which ones.

I know I've driven older Ford Explorers with them, and older Nissan Pathfinders. And I occasionally see them on some higher-end cars like Porsches and Range Rovers, when customers let me sit in them.

Why doesn't everybody do it? Well, I don't want to accuse the automotive industry of being cheap, but I'm guessing that the extra cost is a factor. Maybe it only costs a few dollars to add a second visor, but you multiply that by a million vehicles a year and suddenly your customers are saying, "Wait, the tire tread is optional?"

I think the other factor is

that the demand is not universal. Not that many people regularly drive on the kinds of roads you drive on, Fran.

While we do hear from people who want two visors, it's not what we'd call a groundswell. It's currently tied with electronic butt scratchers as the 131st most-requested new car feature.

It would be nice if you could order it as an option. But it's not necessarily easy to add on after the car is built, since it's mounted to the underside of the car's roof. So you'll probably have to do what your fellow sun-in-your-eyes-on-winding-roads compatriots do, Fran. Get a good pair of sunglasses or a strip of tinted plastic and some double-sided tape for the top of your side window. Happy squinting!

Public Notice

Michigan Department of Health and Human Services
Behavioral and Physical Health and Aging Services Administration

Lead Service Section – Children's Health Insurance Plan
State Plan Amendment Request - Lead in Water Removal of Galvanized Plumbing and Blood Lead Reference Value Change

The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) plans to submit a State Plan Amendment (SPA) request to the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) to establish protocol within the Children's Health Insurance Program lead abatement Health Services Initiative to include the following:

Lead in Water Removal of Galvanized Plumbing

Remove any galvanized plumbing components identified between a lead in water exceedance and the faucet. Galvanized plumbing can be a continued source of lead exposure, even when the lead plumbing components are removed. This will allow for better protection of all residents.

Blood Lead Reference Value (BLRV) Change

Current language in the CHIP-SPA states, "Medicaid or CHIP-eligible beneficiaries that have a blood lead level  $\geq 5$  ug/dL in non-target areas will also be eligible for abatement activities."

To align with our pending change to the BLRV, revise language to state, "Medicaid or CHIP-eligible beneficiaries that have a blood lead level  $\geq 3.5$  ug/dL in non-target areas will also be eligible for abatement activities."

The anticipated effective date for the above amendments to the SPA is May 1, 2022.

The State Plan Amendment is not expected to change the overall budget.

There is no public meeting scheduled regarding this notice. Any interested party wishing to request a written copy of the SPA or wishing to submit comments may do so by submitting a request in writing to: MDHHS/ Behavioral and Physical Health and Aging Services Administration, Program Policy Division, PO Box 30479, Lansing MI 48909-7979 or e-mail MSADraftPolicy@michigan.gov by May 18, 2022. A copy of the proposed State Plan Amendment will also be available for review at http://michigan.gov/mdhhs/0,5885,7-339-73970\_5080-108153--,00.html.
