STATE OF THE STATE

Whitmer calls for tax cuts, school funding, unity

Gov. Gretchen Whitmer speaks before recording her State of the State address at Detroit Diesel, 13400 W. Outer Drive in Redford Township on Wednesday. Jacob Hamilton, MLive.com world that we have tools, we move fast, and we work together. And Michigan is going to win.”

Continues from A1

Whitmer urged Congress to fund legislation to bolster the supply of electric vehicle parts that are in high demand. The governor also proposed giving people who buy electric vehicles or at-home charging stations a $2,500 rebate — which can be stacked on top of a $7,500 federal rebate.

Wednesday’s speech is the last of her first term in office. Republicans hope it’s her last. The governor is up for reelection in November, and 11 candidates plan to compete in the August Republican primary for a chance to run against her in the general election.

Whitmer acknowledged that Michigan residents are struggling with rising inflation and an economy still held back by COVID-19.

The governor proposed repealing Michigan’s so-called “pension tax” and increasing a tax credit for low-income working people from 6% to 20%, reversing tax reforms created by her predecessor in 2011.

The Earned Income Tax Credit allows working people to receive a portion of state taxes based on their income and number of dependents. Increasing the tax refund to 20% would deliver an average tax refund of nearly $3,000 to more than 730,000 working people, according to the governor’s office.

Whitmer plans to exempt public pensions and restore deductions for private retirement income. Restoring the tax exemptions would save 500,000 households an average of $1,000 per year, according to the governor’s office.

The governor also pledged to work with the Legislature to lower the cap on insulin prices. She also touted a new investigation into drug companies launched by Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel.

“For years, drug companies have been jacking up insulin prices; The average price tripled from 2009 to 2019,” Whitmer said. “They reap billions on life-saving medicine because without serious competition, they name their own price. That is unconscionable.”

Whitmer opened her speech by honoring four teenagers killed in a November 2021 shooting at Oxford High School — Madsyn Baldwin, Tate Myre, Hanna St. Juliana and Justin Shilling. The governor promoted a fundraiser for victims of the tragedy.

Whitmer also recognized the 29,605 Michigan residents killed by COVID-19. The coronavirus has continued to affect daily life throughout the state, from schools to the workplace, hospitals and long-term care facilities. Record-breaking outbreaks fueled by the infectious omicron variant dashed hopes that the new year would bring an end to the pandemic.

The governor didn’t provide any details on whether her administration is planning any new action to address the pandemic. Whitmer has largely avoided pandemic mandates in the past year and called on local school districts and governments to make their own choices.

Whitmer temporarily paused in-person classes for high schools earlier in the pandemic but has avoided issuing orders as of late. The governor said she wants students to return to in-person instruction, but didn’t announce any plans to order schools that have gone virtual to do so.

“I want to be crystal clear: Students belong in school,” Whitmer said. “We know it’s where they learn best. Remote learning is not as fulfilling or conducive to a child’s growth.”

Whitmer said she plans to introduce a school aid budget that marks the largest state education funding increase in two decades, without raising taxes.

The governor also touted work on her signature issue fixing the roads. Whitmer said decades of underfunding in infrastructure is over, thanks to the signing of a bipartisan federal infrastructure law last year. Michigan is set to receive $1.39 billion total this year, according to the White House.

Whitmer said 900 bridges and 13,000 miles of road have been repaired, rebuilt or rehabilitated during her first term.

STATE OF THE STATE: RESPONSE

Republicans give speech mixed reviews

Continues from A1

“But this was a speech that reminded us that we endured, and that we made it through the other side of this.”

As Whitmer and legislative incumbents prepare for a complicated election cycle this fall, reaching bipartisan consensus could be more of a challenge. But some of the governor’s main priorities moving into 2022 overlap with the interests of legislative Republicans, and some lawmakers said Wednesday there’s room for common ground.

One of Whitmer’s main proposals floated during the speech was a repeal of Michigan’s so-called “pension tax” and increasing a tax credit for low-income working people from 6% to 20%, reversing tax reforms created by her predecessor in 2011.

The Earned Income Tax Credit allows working people to receive a portion of state taxes based on their income and number of dependents. Increasing the tax refund to 20% would deliver an average tax refund of nearly $3,000 to over 730,000 working people, according to the governor’s office.

Whitmer wants to exempt public pensions and restore deductions for private retirement income. Restoring the tax exemptions would save 500,000 households an average of $1,000 per year, according to the governor’s office.

Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle said they were amenable to the idea of lowering taxes for seniors.

“I’ve always supported putting money back into the pockets of taxpayers,” Senate Appropriations Chair Jim Stamas, R-Midland, said. “The focus is to find a way to responsibly provide relief, knowing that our current level of revenue is not sustainable with much being one-time federal funding.”

But House Tax Policy Committee Chair Matt Hall, R-Marshall, said he’s concerned by some of the governor’s plans, including exploring an earned income tax credit. He said he’d prefer to see broader tax cuts that provide relief to more Michigan residents, especially considering rising inflation and the state’s current revenue surplus.

“We must carefully look at lowering taxes where federal dollars have allowed for an injection of funding and created an opportunity to provide relief,” Hall said.

House Democratic Leader Donna Lasinski, D-Scio Township, said with the ongoing workforce shortages caused by the pandemic, the earned income tax credit is “one of the most reliable measures that you can take to encourage folks to return to the workforce, to help move folks up the career ladder and to encourage folks to work.”

“That’s just what we need here in Michigan to continue to grow our economy — it’s a tax cut that works,” she said.

During Whitmer’s speech, the governor also said she wants students to return to in-person instruction, but didn’t announce any plans to order schools that have gone virtual to do so.

Whitmer temporarily paused in-person classes for high schools earlier in the pandemic but has avoided issuing orders as of late.

Rep. Graham Filler, R-DeWitt, said he appreciated Whitmer’s support for in-person learning, but said the administration needs to take a stronger stance as some districts continue to use remote options.

“It’s been an absolute battle ... not just here in Michigan, but across the country, to keep schools open,” he said. “I want her to use that bully pulpit to tell schools that at all costs, please be open. Because kids have just taken it on the chin.”

Moss said he appreciated the governor’s acknowledgment of the Oxford students who were killed during a school shooting late last year, but hoped that the next step would be to pursue bipartisan solutions that could address gun violence in schools and elsewhere.

“We really need to talk about ways to mitigate gun violence in and around our communities,” he said.

PANDEMIC: ECONOMY

Worker shortages will likely last for years

Continues from A1

Businesses got a preview of the labor squeeze in late 2019 as the unemployment rate dropped to 3.5%. The Fed’s regional survey for November that year reported a worker shortage that “spanned most industries and skill levels.”

Even some giant companies able to offer higher pay can see looming limits.

“The foundation of the economy is labor,” Elon Musk said in a video interview with The Wall Street Journal Dec. 6, explaining why Tesla is working flat-out to develop robots. “There are not enough people. I cannot emphasize this enough.”

Along with health-care and social services, as baby-boomers age, the BLS says leisure and hospitality will be the fastest-growing employer in the coming decade.

That means plenty more demand for workers such as Xochitl Anguiano, a Mexican immigrant who’s now a legal permanent resident and a hotel guest-room attendant in Las Vegas.

But net migration flows are falling along with domestic birth rates. There’s a pandemic shortfall of almost 1 million work visas. Last month’s announcement by the Department of Homeland Security of an additional 20,000 permits for seasonal guest-workers barely dents that. And migration is entangled in politics, making it hard to open the gates again.

What’s more, Anguiano’s family is symbolic of how many of the children of immigrants are achieving higher levels of education, meaning they’re unlikely to step into their parents’ jobs.

As a member of Culinary Workers Union Local 226, Anguiano enjoyed benefits — from health care and pension to legal assistance with immigration issues — that helped her focus on family life and her children’s education.

Now, one of her daughters has a degree in biology from the University of Nevada, and plans to take medical-school entrance exams in March, while another is finishing up a business degree at the same university.

Tight labor markets can boost productivity, as companies work more efficiently and invest in better equipment and software. The current squeeze has brought advantages for workers, too. Those with just a high-school degree enjoyed faster wage growth than other groups last year, according to the Atlanta Fed.

Such conditions could prevail “for some time,” says Nick Bunker, North America research director for the Indeed Hiring Lab. “There’s slower population growth, and we are just going to have fewer people in those younger-age cohorts.”

WASHINGTON

Fed plans to raise rates to cool inflation

The Federal Reserve said Wednesday that it will “soon” be time to start raising interest rates, a key step in reversing pandemic-era policies that have fueled hiring and growth but also high inflation.

The Fed is expected to lift its benchmark short-term rate from zero as soon as March, when it also plans to phase out monthly bond purchases that have been intended to anchor longer-term rates.

Chair Jerome Powell said at a news conference that these actions will help prevent high inflation from becoming entrenched and that the central bank can manage the process in a way that prolongs economic growth and keeps unemployment low.

The central bank’s actions are sure to make a wide range of borrowing — from mortgages and credit cards to auto loans and corporate credit — costlier over time. Those higher borrowing costs, in turn, could slow consumer spending. AP

Overview: The amendments to the rules clarify and revise the requirements for providing a telehealth service, update examination and educational standards, and clarify the requirements for licensure, licensure by endorsement, limited licensure, and relicensure. The proposed rules also amend the licensure by endorsement rule to add the requirements for a Canadian-licensed applicant and require an applicant for licensure by endorsement or relicensure to disclose each license, registration, or certification in a health profession or specialty issued by any other jurisdiction or entity and require the applicant to demonstrate that no disciplinary proceedings are currently pending and that any prior sanction has been satisfied before being licensed by endorsement or relicensed. The amendments also provide the standards for supervision of a veterinary technician and limited licensee, establish the requirements for delegating a duty to and providing supervision of a veterinary student and veterinary assistant, and clarify the licensee's duties pertaining to an animal patient's medical records.

The rules will take effect immediately upon filing with the Secretary of State, unless specified otherwise in the rules. Woman flees police, causes 4-car crash

A 38-year-old Ionia woman was injured after police said she fled a traffic stop in an SUV, then caused a four-vehicle crash.

The crash happened about 12:15 p.m. Wednesday. An Ottawa County sheriff's deputy tried to stop an SUV at Riley Street and West Shore Drive, police said, but the driver fled west on Riley Street. The deputy began a pursuit, but quickly terminated the chase.

Police said the SUV then failed to stop for a red light at Riley Street and 136th Avenue and caused the crash.

The SUV driver had minor injuries and was taken to a local hospital for treatment. There were no other injuries in the crash, police said.

Police said the SUV driver is awaiting arraignment for charges related to the incident. John Tunison, MLive.com
